Anu Lakhan

Untitled I

Gentle, and more gentle still like flowers, but fallen or half drowned, these small words like seeds that grow into islands —

I see you have found the flat shadows of mountains and the ends of meanings.

I cannot begin,
not knowing the way,
not believing the sign;
I wait and forget
and return —
The vining hand, this branching sentence remains.
You remark upon the time.

20